Alanson B. Houghton in
Hornell Speech

Houghton, who was unable to be present, although invited to do so, spoke at the closing session of the D. A. R. convention here. Mr. Cheney delighted everyone by extolling Mr. Houghton and he praised him in his work of which he knew much because of his close association. Mr. Cheney admitted his friend, Mr. Houghton, would probably deny that, but nevertheless he believed it true, pointing to the mysterious trip the ambassador made to this country. Mr. Cheney also complimented Secretary Hughes on his acceptance of the plan.

Mr. Cheney's address was of much interest and while it was regretted that Mr. Houghton could not be present, the banquet was a genuine success.

Colonel Roosevelt, as his auditors clapped their hands, and if you old Timer, in the back, had bothered to read his (Walsh's) report, you would not have asked that question."

FUEL FACTS IMPORTANT IF WINTER COMES

For many years after the pioneers of this country had begun business, Corning was a wood-burning community. The dense forests which surrounded Corning provided plenty of cheap satisfactory fuel. Coal was a luxury, when it was used.

Today the cost of wood makes it prohibitive for steady, even heating. Transportation and mining facilities have made coal comparatively cheap despite present-day wage scales.

Density of population; increasing uses for coal; gradual increase in the number of people using coal; houses without proper storage facilities; homes not owned by the occupant and the latter's fear of being compelled to move which prevents him from filling the bins; householders without ready cash and unable to make proper credit arrangements—all these complications make it necessary that those who can do so should order coal early.

Nice lawns, no driveways, cellars impossible of access for teams or trucks—these conditions compel the carrying from the curb to the cellar of more than 60 per cent of all the coal used in Corning homes.

It is obvious that unless many of the thirty-four hundred Corning homes are supplied with coal early in the year, some of them cannot be supplied quickly when coal is needed.

The Corning Building Company has storage facilities for 6,000 tons of coal—much the largest plant in the city. The trestles are well stocked with Pittsburg Coal, egg, stove, nut and pea. Our careful screening, correct weighing and prompt delivery spells service.

Yet if we supplied no stores, business blocks, small manufacturing plants or hotels and devoted every pound of our possible storage stock to private residences, it would amount to less than two tons per house—not one-quarter enough to heat those houses for winter.

There are a great many reasons why Coal should be ordered and delivered as soon as possible—while the weather is good. We can't think of a single reason why delay is not at least dangerous.
