Climbing Over or Climbing With

A recent article in a Wall Street publication expresses a number of the genuine misgivings felt by conservative minds concerning the effects of cutting down immigration.

One of these objections merits special attention, for it lies at the root of the whole matter and involves what is the crowning interest of our present location.

It is a matter of really being there is no way of getting onward and upward except by climbing over somebody else, he is likely to accept the entire reactionary program.

Many nations have tried this same process and have gone through, after establishing an ever increasing mass of submerged labor over which the privileged have climbed for a while.

A European writer of note has recently said that what distinguishes the American masses from those in Europe is that they are largely without what he calls the illusion of the social revolution.

The Wall Street Journal writer says, "the lack of common labor is likely to result in great and increasing reactionary disruptions."

The question, "who will dig our ditches?" is answered by the mechanical digger, the biggest of which, we hear, can do the work of four hundred men.

Under a different color scheme, he may be tempted to speculate on the question he has been wanting to ask for a long time.

NATURE TALKS and WALKS

CONDUCTED BY G. B. E.

THE FATE OF THE FUR FOLK

Edwin Markham in Ladies Home Journal

Early, while the east is pale, The trapper is out on the frop trail;

Cruel traps are on his back, Cautious like the woodland track;

Day by day he links the chain Of these grim machines of pain.

In whose merciless iron jaws Little fur folk lie, because Men must high on Fortane ride, Women have an hour of pride.

Squirrel, ermine, sable, mole, Out for food from cliff and hole; Muskrat, silver fox and mink, At the stream for evening drink— All are tempted to this hell That some bank account may swell.

Ladies, do you think of this— Upon teapots howl and hiss, Where the folk of hill and cave Grow with no one there to save? Do you see them crunched and done, Steel teeth biting into bone?

Ladies, did you ever see An other gnawing to get free? Gnawing what? His fettered leg, For he has no friend to beg? Do you see that tortured shape, Gnaw his leg off to escape?

Have you seen these creatures die While the bleeding hours go by— These poor mothers in the wood, Robbed of joy and motherhood? Do you see, when at night you kneel, See them in their traps of steel— Not alone by pain accursed, But by hunger and by thirst? Do you hear their dying cries When a crow picks up their lives?

Yes, sometimes in dreams you hear Yells of agony and fear From the snare of iron teeth, With that manning that breeds, For all night, where storms are whirled, Greatly curdling the white world—

Grams of mothers dying so, Green of little ones that sit as homeless, hungry in the snow.

Ladies, are the furs you wear Worth the hell of this despair?

There are no better colors for a flag than red, white and blue.

Dark-haired women should wear warm colors but a red-haired woman appears best.

A SEA STORY

One of the finest sea stories ever written is about a skipper and mate who were carrying a load of pilgrims to the Holy Land. The boat hit a submerged wreck which tore a hole in her side.

When their boat seemed certain to go down, the mate and three others deserted in the only lifeboat while the pilgrims slept. What happened after that makes one of the most thrilling sea stories ever printed.

The point of this story is; that the ship carried inadequate protection against emergencies. The captain of that ship probably considered that they needed only the one lifeboat.

How like this captain is the motorist? How many autos are driven over the roads without adequate insurance protection against an accident?

We are always ready to advise you of the kind of insurance that you need.

Auto Fire and Theft Actual Value (or No Amount) Policies are now in effect. In this policy the actual value of your automobile becomes the amount of insurance without being specified in dollars. If your auto is insured for whatever cash value may be at the time the loss occurs. Ask us about it.

Both Mrs. Shea and myself feel that we should say something to you about the performance of our new Cadillac automobile, on our recent trip to Florida. As you already know, this is our sixth Cadillac.

We have driven it now ten thousand miles in six months. Today our car seems just as smooth and quiet as the day we bought it. We have put our car through some very severe tests due to the road conditions. We must say that the Cadillac Company and your company are to be congratulated on having so fine a mechanical product. Our expense in operating our Cadillac the first ten thousand miles was comparatively nothing.

The speed, comfort and hill climbing ability of this Cadillac are certainly marvellous and show that the Cadillac has reached the height of perfection for the present day automobile.

Thanking you and your company for the past favors, I remain,
Yours very truly,
